COUSTEAU ~ CADETS!

Jean-Michel Cousteau’s Ocean Futures Society &
Great Lakes Division Sea Cadets Explore Shipwrecks of Lake Huron

Article & Photography by David J. Campbell, BU2 (DV) USNR
Flying Before Breakfast.

From the masthead of the Pride of Michigan, we see the Manfish, the Ocean Future’s Society’s diving and research vessel with crew preparing for the morning’s first dive.

Welcome aboard the Pride of Michigan! You’re about to get underway with our Great Lakes Division U.S. Naval Sea Cadets, and Jean-Michel Cousteau’s Ocean Futures Society. We’ll be headed out in Lake Huron to explore shipwrecks, learn about zebra mussels, and participate in a film documentary!

The three-day trip highlighted here is representative of the ongoing Sea Cadet training, exploration, research mission that the Great Lakes Division has been involved with for 32 years.

We’ve got some weather moving in, so let’s get going… The following pages are photos, captions and quotes from our trip to help you learn about Sea Cadets. We hope you’ll take an interest and give us a call. We’d love to have you on board with us!
Our planet is a living organism; the sea is full of living creatures. What happens to our seas is happening to us. Sea Power doctrines must ultimately direct the protection of our natural environment. The Great Lakes Division of Sea Cadets is making a vital contribution in preparing our future leaders.”

- Jean-Michel Cousteau
President and Chairman
Ocean Futures Society

“I saw the boat, a tent, and Sea Cadets on the dock at South River Road. I asked my dad to pull over so we could find out what was going on; it was a recruiting event... I’m 14 now, and I’m certified in Advanced Open Water Diving and Diver Propulsion Vehicles”

- Jon Odom
Great Lakes Division Sea Cadets
Harrison Township, Michigan
Sharing Stories and Passing on Truths.

Ocean Futures Society’s Sound Engineer Gary Holland teaches a few lessons of life, as he shares with Cadet Andrew Innes a close encounter with a whale while filming an underwater documentary. Cadet Innes has a few stories of his own.

“The Sea Cadets program enables kids to take their aspirations to the next level and prepares them for leadership... I’m very proud of the volunteers who are taking time out to lead their program.”

- Gary Holland
  Expedition Sound Engineer
  Jean-Michel Cousteau’s Ocean Futures Society

“Diving with marine biologists is great, but I worry about kicking up the bottom while we’re filming... This is my fourth year with the Cadet’s. I’m now certified Nitrox, Great Lakes Research, Advanced P.A.D.I. Diver, and Wreck Diver.”

- Andrew Innes
  Great Lakes Division Sea Cadets
  De La Salle High School, Warren Michigan

Article and Photography by David J. Campbell, BU2 (DV) USNR
Navy Representative, NRD Michigan, NRS Traverse City
October 2005
“On behalf of the Great Lakes Division Sea Cadets, I am thrilled to share our experience exploring shipwrecks of Lake Huron with Jean-Michel Cousteau’s Ocean Futures Society. It was truly a momentous occasion for our division, and working with such a prestigious organization only added to the significance of the event.”

- Luke Clyburn, LCDR
Great Lakes Division Sea Cadets
President, Noble Odyssey Foundation

“Great Lakes Division seems to be a great Sea Cadet Division, and there are a lot of opportunities... Our Justice Division [in Atlanta] wants to get a sailboat... I want to study law and plan to join the Coast Guard Auxiliary when I turn 18.”

- Charles Genner
Justice Division Sea Cadets
Atlanta, Georgia
Cadet Nathan Dembeck takes a minute away from his duties as honorary coxswain of the Manfish to look on as Antoine Rosset shoots topside video for the upcoming production, “America’s Undersea Treasures”. Great Lakes Division Sea Cadets have participated in a number of video documentaries over the years.

“To see the joy in the faces of these kids can remind us of who we once were, and perhaps what we have lost over time… Makes me wish we had more Sea Cadets.”

- Antoine Rosset
  Expedition Video Camera Operator
  Freelance

“Being out on the water, being out on the ship, all the diving and cool people we get to meet; that’s what I like about being a Sea Cadet.”

- Nathan Dembek
  Great Lakes Division Sea Cadets
  Warren, Michigan
The Cousteau Spirit Lives On

Fabian Cousteau offers a lesson on technical diving gear to Kavan Checote and other Great Lakes Division Sea Cadets aboard the Pride of Michigan: Like his father, Jean-Michel, and grandfather, Jacques-Yves, Fabian’s visage, voice and gestures take us captive, luring us into the sea.

“Sea Cadets is a way for youth to find a meaningful life. The Sea Cadet Corps is a critical path, not just for a career in the Navy or Maritime Industries, but also for building future leaders. The kind of leaders concerned with our economies for sure, but equally concerned with environment, and our seas.”

- Fabian Cousteau
  Grandson of Jacques-Yves Cousteau
  Ocean Futures Society

“M y grandfather was a U.S. Navy Hard Hat Diver and Chief Ship-Fitter; now they call that Hull-Tech... I want to be a Navy Diver too...It’s been great to learn diving through Sea Cadets…”

- Kavan Checote
  Constellation Division Sea Cadets
  Waynesboro, Pennsylvania
Ships and Lakes in Peril?

The wreck, Nordmier, looms as a terrifying reminder to mariners: Huron in her wrath offers safe harbor to no one. While our divers enjoyed unheard of visibility this day due to “filtering effect” of the zebra mussel, marine biologists struggle to find answers for the mounting damage to the ecosystem.

“Zebra mussels are of major concern. While the obvious “cleaning” of the Great Lakes seems to be a benefit, we are convinced that the zebra mussel is robbing nutrients from the ecosystem - ultimately a detrimental effect.”

- V. Elliott Smith, Ph.D.
  Marine Biology
  Noble Odyssey Foundation

“Being involved with Sea Cadets has given me an interest in the Maritime Industry and in the Marine Sciences… I’m an advanced diver and also certified in Search and Recovery.”

- Jonathan Allen
  Great Lakes Division Sea Cadets
  Grosse Pte. Farms, Michigan

Article and Photography by David J. Campbell, BU2 (DV) USNR
Navy Representative, NRD Michigan, NRS Traverse City
October 2005
Page 7 of 8
Make Your Course One Eight Zero

Sea Cadets can inspire a 180-degree turn-around in the lives of adults and youth alike. Make your course change today, and share your time and talents with Sea Cadets. There’s a good chance you’ll find adventure – and rediscover yourself. Underwater photo courtesy: Luke Clyburn.

We hope you have enjoyed our trip, and now we ask a simple question. Would you like to be involved? If you’re thinking, “yes”, then contact the Noble Odyssey Foundation at 248-666-9359 or visit us online at www.prideofmichigan.org.